Management Comments (05/31/19)

A Trump's Twitter message announcing an increase from 10% to 25% in tariffs to Chinese products was the start of a new escalation in trade war, which has provoked important corrections in stock markets during May. The negative expectations to global growth derived from this escalation meant new historical minimums in some government bond yields.

FX markets were also affected, witnessing an appreciation of the so called "safe haven currencies", especially Swiss Franc and Japanese Yen, and more pronounced depreciation in currencies with bigger links to the Chinese economy within our universe, New Zealand dollar and Australian dollar.

The fund finishes May with a return of -3.2%. The biggest losers during the month have been shorts in JPY vs AUD, NZD and EUR, and shorts in CHF vs USD and NZD. On the positive side, longs in AUD vs NZD, shorts in GBP vs AUD and longs in USD vs CHF.

After several months where not so many opportunities showed up, now we are finding some very good trades and expect the strategy to behave well going forward.
